THE RAZOR TRAGEDY.

The Prisoner's Mother and Sister Describe His Horrible Crime.

The Defense Begin With Evidence Showing His Generally Peaceable Character.

There was quite a large crowd present in the criminal court room yesterday morning when Judge Hagner assumed the bench to preside over the hearing in the Minor murder case. The remaining juror was secured in the person of Mr. M. J. Adler, who, although he said he had formed an opinion which would require evidence to remove, was adjudged competent by Judge Hagner and accepted by the government, the defense having exhausted their challenges. An exception.

exhausted their challenges. An exception was noted by Mr. Miller.

The jury is composed of Heary M. Dellinger, James M. Foster, George H. Boston, F. J. Heiberger, jr., Andrew Goddard, Charles Raoff, John Riddle, W. B. S. Clymer, Harry C. Noyes, John R. Connell, Joseph H. Semmes, and M. J. Adler. Messrs. Fostor, Boston, and Semmes are colored.

Mr. Moore opened the case for the government shortly after 11 celeek. He said the ment shortly after 11 o'clock. He said the government proposed to show that the married life of the couple had not been smooth, and that after repeated quarrels his wife, on the morning of Oct. 11, had threatened to leave him. He had gone off to his work, and then returned, and finding his wife packing up her things had become infuriated and brutally murdered her.

The first witness called was Mrs. Anna Minor, the mother of the prisoner. She is a bright mulatto of very respectable appearance, and was dressed in deep mourning. She gave her testimony in a straightforward, carnest manner, and betrayed no emotion. The witness said she did not see Frank on the morning of the murder until after he returned to the house from work about 8:30. turned to the house from work, about 8:30. She was outside on the pavement talking with a next-door neighbor when she heard Victoria scream. Had not heard any sounds of a quarrel before that. Witness ran up stairs and found her son cutting his wife's throat. Witness begged him to stop, but he did not pay any attention to her. The razor was here shown and identified by Mrs. Minor. When witness went in Victoria was lying on the floor with her head toward the door and Frank had hold of her by the side of the neck. Witness believed she said "Oh, Frank, don't kill her," but she was so weak and frightened she did not know exactly what she did say. Emma turned to the house from work, about 8:30. not know exactly what she did say. Emma Minor, her daughter, came up and he kept on cutting Victoria. Witness went down stairs and about three or four minutes afterward Frank came down. Witness said to him "Well, Frank Minor, you have done for your-self now." He said, "Yes, she's dead." Frank and his wife had been quarrelling off and on for eight or nine months. Sometimes she would call him names and aggravate him so that he would smack her.

Cross-examined by Mr. Miller: Frank was always a dutiful husband. He was too loving toward his wife. Eight or nine months ago Frank began accusing Victoria of being too intimate with a young man named Adolphus Johnson, for whom Victoria washed, and who used to come to the house and lay down. Witness had told Victoria that she ought to Witness had told Victoria that she ought to tell him not to come to the house. Frank told her continually that he did not want Johnson to visit the house. The quarrel between Frank and his wife had gone on for eight or nine months. He would come home from work and be pleasant to his wife, and she would quarrel with him. Sometimes he would sit down and cry and sometimes he would see out. Had heard and sometimes he would go out. Had heard Victoria threaten to leave Frank, and had also heard her say to Frank that Adolphus was his master. She wouldn't go out with him nor to church with him. him, nor to church with him.

After Mrs. Minor had left the stand, Judge

Hagner called up George J. Mueller, who had been summoned as a talesman and neglected to respond, and fined him $5 for contempt of court. A recess was then taken. After re-cess Emma Minor, sister of the accused, took the stand. She testified that on the morning of the homicide witness was returning from a hydrant, about a square and a half away from the house, when she saw her mother run out on the pavement. Heard no noise. Went over to the house, and upstairs into the room occupied by Minor and his wife. Here she found Victoria lying on the floor, and Frank cutting her throat, floor, and Frank cutting her throat. Henry L. Gessford, keeper of the first pre-cinct station, testified that Minor had ad-mitted killing his wife and expected to pay the penalty, and Police Sergeant Pierce testi-fied to similar admissions.

Mr. Wright opened the case for the defense. He said the charge of murder was the killing of one person by another with malice implied or otherwise. The defendant has always led a conscientious, honorable, and upright life. He won the respect of the community in which he lived. He was always industrious. We claim that the prisoner is not guilty of the crime because he was mentally irresponsible. Mr. Wright said that they proposed to prove that when Minor was 11 years of age he was struck on the temple by a policeman's billy, and that ever after. by a policeman's billy, and that ever after-ward he was a strange and peculiar man. He never associated with other men, and never went out of the house at night save to school. He had known his wife from her youngest days, and he loved her with a pasaionate fervor. After they were married the wife violated all the proprieties which a du-tiable wife should hold as sacred. She caused him to become the scorn of the neighborhood. About four months before the fatal day he al-lewed his wife to do Johnson's washing. Johnson made this an excuse to come to the house, where Minor frequently found him unhouse, where Minor frequently found him under suspicious circumstances. Minor forbade him to come to his house. He complied, but his wife continued to meet Johnson. The defendant grew morese and his mental condition became so delicate that it was liable to break at any moment. Then his wife left him, and fearing that Minor's reason would entirely leave him his mother and some friends. and fearing that Minor's reason would en-tirely leave him his mother and some friends went to his wife and persuaded her to return. She came back sullen and surley. Then they quarreled more and more about Johnson, and she called her husband a low nigger dog and said Johnson was his master. Mr. Wright said the defense would never that Minor's presaid the defense would prove that Minor's on tire conduct had changed, and that he ha acted in an insane manner for two weeks be fore the homicide.

Mr. George L. Sheriff, John Corrigan, William, Fugitt, William Scenner, Dr. S. A. Sumby, and others then testified to the genod character of the defendant, and the court adjourned.

JUSTICS OLD STAND.

Here she found Victoria lying on the floor, and Frank cutting her throat. Only saw him make one cut. It was made on her neck. When Minor came down stairs he said to witness to keep away from him or he would do her the same way. At this time he was walking up and down the street before the house. When Minor came down stairs he was in his shirt sleeves. (Witness hor recognized the bloody shirt and pants which Minor wore on the morning of the homicide).

Dr. J. F. Hartigan testified to going to 323 F street southwest on the 11th of October, and making an examination of the murdered woman. Death occurred from shock and hemorrhage. The wounds upon the body were innumerable and the mutilation was frightful.

Cross-examined by Mr. Miller: Any one of the wounds on the neck would have probably caused death. The wounds on the face and side of the head were from two to five inches long. There were several gashes on the forehead, and the nose was cut through from the base to the point. The cuts on the throat ran into one another, and formed a chasm under the chin, the head falling back, and only being held to the body by a little skin and flesh at the back of the head. Three fingers on the right hand were cut. Witness had seen and excessively well as the back of the head. Three fingers on the wounds on the fingers might have been caused by the woman attempting to ward off one of the blows.
